Two Hundred Cities in Revolt.

The most remarkable political fact of the last decade is the rapidly with which American cities are changing their form of government.

Twelve years ago, Galveston Texas, was practically wiped out by a tidal wave. When the waters receded they left the island covered with wre kage, slime and debt. But that tidal wave wiped out more than a single city! It swept away—though no one dreamed of it at the time—the city boss and the corrupt politicians from hundreds of American municipalities.

Galveston was left broken and bankrupt. The work of reconstruction—the great problem of making the city safe—called for the best efforts of the strongest and ablest men. It was no job for gang politicians, such as had ruled and despoiled the city—in alliance with big business—during the old days. In their extremity, the people of the city called upon the legislature and the Governor of the state to help them. They asked that the old form of city government be suspended and that a commission of five strong men be appointed, who should have absolute charge of every department of the city government.

So—with no idea of forever ending the rule of the Boss—did Commission Government come into existence.

The governor's commission took hold of their great task like men. For two years they labored mightily, while the old politicians sulked and growled and starved. Then there came a chance for the politicians to take the whole question into the courts. The courts decided that because a majority of the commission was appointed by the Governor, the whole body and its work was unconstitutional. Whereupon the people rose in their wrath and elected the same five commissioners by a vote that buried the gangsters deeper than the tidal wave.

So the original "commission" became a purely popular and elective body, though the name—now a complete misnomer—has struck. It was five years before the Galveston antitoxin for the city boss disease began to take. Houston, watching with jealous eyes the rebirth and rapid growth of its sister city, was the first to follow the Galveston example, and, on the heels of Houston, came revolution.

Between January 1, 1906, and February 1, 1912, no less than 196 American cities scattered through 33 states, adopted the commission form of government.

More than two hundred other municipalities are now seriously considering the adoption of the Commission and the "Galveston idea", while not adopted in its entirety, has materially affected the form of government in such great cities as Boston and Pittsburgh.

The essential features of the Galveston or Commission form of city administration are these:

1. All power and responsibility must be centered in and confined to a small council or commission, usually of five members, who, by themselves or through their own appointees, pass all city ordinances, enforce them, and administer all city affairs. This commission is the city government.

2. The members of the commission must be elected from the city at large and not as representing any ward or district.

3. The members of the commission must be the only elective officers of the city (with the possible exception of an auditor or school board) and must have the power to appoint all the subordinate administrative officials.

4. The commission must have the power to remove at will any or all of the officials it has appointed. In this way only can the commission, itself, be held directly responsible for results by the people of the city.

The initiative, referendum and recall, while the form part of the charter in most commission-governed cities, are not an essential part of the plan.—Henry M. Hyde in April Technical World Magazine.
